Bridging A Gap

When the phone rang that day Steve Gass, son of the late Robert Gass (Co E) never expected that he was about to meet a brother he never knew he had.

On the calling end was Leon Tetherton of England who as an infant in the mid-1940s had been put up for adoption.

In recent years Leon had set out to learn his parentage and was able to obtain a copy of his birth certificate which disclosed who his parents had been. His English mother was relatively easy to trace but unfortunately Leon also learned that she was now deceased.

However, he was able to contact members of her family, i.e., his step-siblings who were stunned to learn that she had another child earlier in her life, a child that she never mentioned. Since that initial contact they have all met and remain in touch.

Learning more of his father, however, was more difficult as the man had been an American soldier and while his name was given, little else was recorded about him other than the fact that he was from New York.

Turning to the internet for further research Leon came across our 508th website and found a few mentions of his dad including a number of photos, some of which were attributed to a Steven Gass.

Searching for occurrences of that name in New York produced a few possibilities and Leon began calling each in turn.

That day he hit upon the right number!

It was something of a miracle, Steve recalled, as he had been living in Las Vegas and only recently had returned to NY state. It was as though he had been positioned by an unseen force to be found.

An exchange of various photographs showing Leon's mother served to prove that the match had been made. She had somehow met Bob who was convalescing in England following a wound in July 1944 and a romance ensued.

Steve had already been working to commemorate his father by donating all his memorabilia to The Museum of Military Memorabilia in the Naples, Florida Municipal Airport. Gass felt that having the items on permanent display where they can be seen by the traveling public every day would be a wonderful way to commemorate his dad.

But now there were two sons in the mix so Leon is traveling to Naples to be there in August 2015 on the day that the display is unveiled.

The two brothers are looking forward to meeting face-to-face for the first time and we are certain that there will be lots to talk about!

Belgian Citizen Honors The 508th PIR

by Rob Palmer

In December of 1944, the city of Rencheux, Belgium lay in the shadow of the conflict raging across the region. Many families from this small town had fled to the nearby caves in order to safeguard their property and cattle while a few refused to abandon their homes and stayed behind hoping for the best. One of those was a young boy named Fernand Hiernaux, whose family took in some fifty paratroopers from Company A. Hiernaux's family home was positioned just behind the line of defense on the road leading up to the barracks and right in the zone where combat took place, allowing the fifty paratroopers quick access to their guard positions and later helped them in fighting a rear guard action from Rencheux to Goronne and the Barrier Line.

Fernand was thunder struck by the men of Company A who had taken up billets in his home during the Christmas of 1944. Both he and his brother Arnaud were so impressed with the gallantry of the men of Company A that years later when they were called up for military service in the Belgian Army they chose to join the paratroopers and "It was the example set by the men of December 1944 that made us decide to join the paratroopers, stepping into their footsteps, many years after we had met them in Rencheux," recalls Fernand.

Hiernaux has recalled that Joseph Farrell (Canadian translator pictured above), Gerigeri (Willy) and Lapso (George) were among those who stayed with his family that December. Not only did Fernand choose to follow in the steps of the paratroopers who had so mesmerized him as a child, but his profound respect continues to this day as he has adopted 10 graves of fallen members of the 508th in the cemetery at Henri Chapelle. This is a tradition that he has passed to his eldest daughter Catherine, who has herself adopted two graves. In his seventies, Fernand is still very active and is constantly participating in ceremonies at Rencheux, continuing to honor the memory of the 508th PIR.

Fernand Hiernaux has adopted the following 508th graves:

- Edward Rusch
- Brussie Cascio
- Howard Alfrey
- Wendell Sedam
- Walter Firestone
- George Clementz
- Harry Ackerman
- Manuel Cordova
- Walter Drelick
- George Bates

His daughter, Catherine, has adopted the graves of Eugene Roy and Albert Nicoletta. His daughter, Anne, and granddaughter, Maria Naty, have also adopted other American graves.

If anyone would like to contact Fernand, they can do so through Family and Friends member, Erik van der Hoeven at erikvenderhoeven@planet.nl and he will translate for Fernand.

Many thanks to Erik for providing us with Fernand's story.

Mail Box

Dear Editor of Diablo,

My grammar school coach, George William Wall was killed on that fateful day March 14, 1945 at Sissone, France. Disaster struck that day as the 508th did practice jumps. The plane behind G.W. Wall's stick lost an engine and crashed, taking its crew and six other troopers already in the air to their death.

I attended the 508th reunion in Birmingham, AL and became an honorary member. Plus, I met some of the men who jumped with Wall. I have searched for men who knew him and for a possible unit picture.

Enclosed is my personal memory of his death and his photo from the Birmingham News announcing his death. I thought you might use this material in the Diablo.

I received a letter from Charles W. Paradise in 2007. He wrote, "One day we were to do a practice jump. Before we got on board, I noticed the propeller blades were flopping back and forth, not running 'true'. As I had been balancing propellers for Hamilton Standard, a part of United Technologies in Connecticut for several years, I believed that something, possibly a 'spider', had broken inside the hub and the propeller was not operating 'true'. I stepped forward to alert the colonel that the props were not operating correctly only to be strictly ordered to, 'get back in formation'. I did so reluctantly along with seventeen other troopers boarded the plane for the next jump. I made my jump with others, but as I drifted earthward, I saw the plane afire and falling."

Seven members of the 508 and four members of the plane crew were among the dead. My question is, "Who was the colonel that dismissed Paradise's information?" And did the said, colonel, ever regret not heading Paradise's warning?

I, too, served in the army of occupation, in Japan.

Sincerely,
Dr. William P. Buck

Memories

By Dr. William P. Buck

Memories, we all have many of them. Every time I drive past the old Cow Pasture at lower Highland Avenue and 32nd Street one of my memories floods my emotions. It involves Billy Wall, my sand lot grammar school football coach who was only a couple of years older than his players. He came to the cow pasture one Sunday to watch us play football.

These were the days before little league and organized football, but somehow Billy Wall had pulled together a group of Norwood kids to play on "his" football team. We played other teams all over town.

World War II was in full swing and our forces were fighting in France. Billy Wall turned eighteen and joined the paratroopers. Naturally I wanted to follow in his footsteps. On furlough before going overseas Billy stopped at the Cow Pasture to watch some of "his" boys play.

After our game, I shook Billy's hand and remarked how sharp he looked. He wore his trooper wings proudly on his chest and his pants were bloused in his polished boots. His round paratrooper emblem was sewn on the left side of his overseas cap which sat squarely in the middle of his forehead. He was small, lean, wore glasses and was not the usual robust type generally pictured when you think of a paratrooper.

He looked me straight in the eye and said, "Buck, promise me you'll never join the paratroopers."

He knew my daring spirit, but I answered in an offhanded way that I wouldn't.

Billy soon had to leave. He walked some fifty feet away from the crowd, topped the embankment near 32nd Street and stood there on the grass that has already become brown from the first frost. He took a long last look at the bright blue autumn sky, and slowly surveyed the entire scene. Then turned, got in his car and drove away.

I still have his picture that was in the paper telling of his death, "killed in action". It is pressed close to a letter he wrote to me the day before he died.

Faded treasures, but every time I pass the old Cow Pasture the memory of Billy Wall standing tall taking his last look at the boys he helped raise and for whom he would soon die passes across my mind. That was the autumn of 1944.

Dear Ellen,

Chuck Howell and I were in the first group to reach Blanding on October 19, 1942. Tell Darrell Glass that I am one more from C Co. still around. I was 94 in January. Have talked with Brody Hand, also from C Co. I am still in good health (I think).

I lost the love of my life, Bette, 5 years ago. We were married on April 25, 1943 with Chuck and Helen Howell in York, South Carolina. We were high school sweethearts and were married for 66 years.

CONGRATULATIONS

Congratulations to Bill Knapp and George Shenkle who received their Orange Lanyards from the Netherlands 70 years after war's end. George received his on a visit commemorating the 70th Anniversary of Operation Market Garden and Bill received his on a visit commemorating the 70th anniversary of VE Day.

On his trip, Bill, also visited the American Cemetery at Henri-Chapelle, Belgium where he laid a wreath at the grave of his buddy, Joe Endress. About the experience, Bill wrote, "Em (Bill's wife) made a beautiful folder about Joe and his brother

(the Endress family lost two of their three sons in WWII) and I left a couple of coins. One of the 508 that I had been carrying around for ages, to be placed in his archives. I loved that guy so much."

(Note: Listening to you, Walter Barrett, and Harry Roll speak of Joe, I almost feel like I knew him. I always visit his and Capt. Bill Nation's graves when visiting Belgium.) the battlefield, but it gives Paratroopers additional skills that will last beyond their service.

WWII VETS JUMP BACK IN TIME

By Chris Fletcher, Fort Jackson Leader

CAMDEN, S.C. (April 2, 2015) -- More than 20 World War II veterans celebrated completing the U.S. Army's first mass parachute drop at the 82nd Airborne Division Memorial Sunday.

Though the parachute drop 72 years ago was successful and helped pave the way for mass parachute operations in Africa and Europe, three paratroopers died during the training event. The magnitude of this initial jump was conveyed in a letter written by Barbara Gavin, the daughter of Lt. Gen. Jim Gavin, who commanded the 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment, or PIR.

"Training leads to perfection in performance, and without this jump in Camden, which is being commemorated here today, those combat jumps during the war might have had a different ending," read military historian Robert Anzuoni, from Gavin's letter to the audience of more than 100. Anzuoni also noted how Gavin felt for the paratroopers who sacrificed their lives in training so others could get it right in combat. "Today, I believe my father's spirit is there with you, honoring those three paratroopers who lost their lives taking part in this operation in Camden," Anzuoni read from Gavin's letter. "It led to four magnificent combat jumps of the 82nd Airborne Division in World War II."

Before the jump 72 years ago, the largest parachute drop consisted of a battalion-sized operation. The entire 505th PIR, three battalions from the 82nd, participated in the Camden parachute drop. Anzuoni said the parachute assault on Camden left no doubt about the feasibility of regimental-sized parachute operations.

Highlighting the event were vignettes and anecdotes from retired Command Sgt. Maj. Kenneth Merritt and former Maj. T. Moffat Burriss, both participants of the jump in Camden, S.C. and a number of combat jumps in World War II. "I had just made squad leader after being in the Army only five months," said Merritt, of his jump into South Carolina 72 years ago. "I was so determined to do something good; the first thing that happened was I lost my compass and my South Carolina map." Merritt added he was called up to see his supply officer after the training operation and told he would have to pay $16.98 for the lost compass, which equaled one-third of his monthly basic pay.

U.S. Rep. Joe Wilson and retired Army Maj. Gen. Julian Burns also spoke at the event.

The commemoration allowed today's generation to jump into the past with World War II re-enactors dressed the part and period-piece equipment displays on hand for spectators.

SEARCHING FOR.....

I am looking for anyone connected to Lt. Barry Albright. It seems he was a pretty good officer, and is commended for calling in an artillery barrage on the Germans attacking Hill 30. I cannot find a picture of him anywhere, nor any personal info.

Also seeking ...

- Family members of LTC Thomas Shanley or Otho Holmes.

- Contact details for James Rigas. He was part of General Gavin's staff at Braunstone Park. I have a few questions about the Divisional HQ. Finding information is proving to be difficult.
