

Civilians Gladhand Red Devils In States

NO GRAVY TRAIN READY FOR RETURNING VETS

Welcome mats are clean, bright and shiny, you'll do more hand-shaking than a politician at an Elk's clam bake and you'll be damn glad to be back—but don't waste your time looking for a seat on the gravy train.

This is the good word being passed out today by the first contingent of Red Devils to rejoin the 508th Parachute Infantry Regiment after spending 30-days at home in the States.

"When we go home for keeps, we'll get the kind of a welcome that has made the State's famous, but that's about it," Corporal Robert Ellis of Headquarters and Headquarters Company predicted.

"Many of the civilians I talked to on the train, in New York and a few at home in Newton, Massachusetts got the idea that we are as well off as they and it's still every man for himself, war or no war," he explained.

Corporal Ellis' opinion, generally speaking, was about the same as that of the six others from the Regiment who accompanied him to the States and back again to the ETO, a trip which took about 15 weeks.

The seven Red Devils, all veterans of the Regiment's campaigns of Normandy, Holland and Belgium, were part of the first "dream" quota permitting troops 30-day furloughs at home.

All agreed that as far as their families and close personal friends were concerned things were just as good if not better than before. It was conversation with casual acquaintances or strangers that indicated that a war record was a swell thing to have in war time but at the same time wars don't last forever.

"What I like to remember is that I was treated like a king in Owenton, Kentucky," Corporal King S. Burke of Headquarters Company added.

Sgt. Howard H. Gouge of A Company and Tampa, Florida offered:

"Our wives can't save much money the way prices are and we shouldn't expect them to meet us at the door with a bag full of dough. I bought some fresh eggs at the grocer and they cost me 83 cents. I never heard of anything like that before in Tampa, Florida."

S-Sgt. Phillip Klineteker of Company B and Siloam Springs, Arkansas, passes on this tip:

"The cigarette deal is rough on the civilians but I found that as long as I kept my ribbons on I could usually get my favorite brand."

1st Sgt. Roy T. Bennett of A Company and Dayton, Ohio says fellows making the trip are pleasantly surprised with the minimum of O. I. red tape encountered and the accommodations available.

T/S James E. Greenwood of the Medics from Ramah, Colorado seemed to think the boys on rotation wanted to have educational refresher courses when the war is over. "It's surprising how much we have forgotten."

Sergeant Robert J. Bennett, Company I.

Staff Sergeant Robert W. Vandorseen.

Previous awards to the four officers and two non-coms were made by the U. S. government.

Colonel Lindquist wears the Silver Star, Bronze Star; Lt. Col. Shanley the Silver Star, Bronze Star and Purple Heart; Lt. Col. Menden the Distinguished Service Cross and Bronze Star; Lt. Col. Warren the Silver Star and Purple Heart; Sgt. Bennett the Purple Heart and S-Sgt. VanHorn the Silver Star.

MAIL DEVIL'S DIGEST HOME FOR SIX CENTS

Here's the dope on getting your Devil's Digest home.

A mailing blank will be found on page 8. Fill it out legibly, that is so the mail clerk can read the name and complete address of the person to whom you desire a copy sent.

Six-cents worth of stamps will send DEVIL'S DIGEST first class and should get it to someone in the States within a month or to someone in the United Kingdom within 10 days.

If you want faster service than this use air mail but it will cost you about 24 cents per copy since the weight is two and one-half ounces.

VOLUME II—NO. 1

MAJOR GENERAL JAMES M. GAVIN

Major General James M. Gavin, commanding the 82nd Airborne Division, tributes the fighting Red Devils who fought under the "All-American" colors during the victorious campaigns of Normandy, Holland and the Ardennes sector of Belgium.

An enlisted man in the regular army at 17 years of age, he later passed entrance examinations for the United States Military Academy and today is the most-jumped general officer in the Army. He commanded the 508th Parachute Infantry Regiment before taking command of the division 15 August 1944. In all combat umps he has been the first out of his serial.

Esteem with which General Gavin holds the 508th Parachute Infantry Regiment is found in the inscription he wrote on the above photo he gave to Colonel Roy E. Lindquist, leader of the Red Devils.

General Gavin's tribute: "To members of the 508th Parachute Infantry with admiration for their fighting spirit, courage and superb fighting abilities.

First Battalion Chow Hounds Increase Under New Mess Plan

Hq. Co.—A new era is on hand . . . with the company mess system now in effect, the coffee is really drinkable and what is even more surprising is that the cooks are now asking how we want our meals prepared. Keep up the good work! . . . Some of the stories that have come back along with the furloughers from the land of mild and bitters, are keeping the personnel amused: Sgt. Paternacki has one about a five-mile walk and a brick wall . . . S/Sgt. Wilkinson's trip who not only peasant but also profitable . . . Pfc Campbell's trip was also pleasant but his explanations are more embarrassing . . . When Cpl. Mc Mahon and Pfc Andrews did a little scavenging for wire the other day, the chaplain's jeep was an accessory to the "crime."

A Co.—The "unluckiest man" title goes to Sgt. Hunt, who's been wounded three times but still doesn't have a Purple Heart. Maybe he's independent or just trying to impress the medics. 1st Sgt. Bennett is back from the States and is available for lectures. The talk about him hobnobbing with bigshots (generals, too) isn't hurting his status one bit . . . When Cpl. Honest John Shultz came back from his Paris pass, he echoed the sentiments of all who've been there: "48 hours ain't enuf!" . . . When Silver Star holder Sgt. Don Goings made the furlough journey to England recently, it was his first trip to the UK. He visited the 508th capital—Nottingham.

B Co.—Latest Bn. Sgt. Major is Sgt. Nick Russo, formerly of B Co. . . . Cpl. Bill Dean came back from his UK furlough with an abscessed tooth. "The steaks," he complained, "are getting tougher" . . . Company barber Moughlin gives out free rumors with each haircut. Both are in the true army tradition—bad! Did you know: Elek Hartman's mail has him addressed at various times as Sgt., T/4, Cpl., Pvt. and Pfc? The last is correct . . . Pfc Persyn laughs all the time? And what is there to laugh about? CW did it: dit-dit-dit! Cpl. Barnett is sending out SOS's for a print of the picture that was taken with him and "Legs" Dietrich . . . S/Sgt. Wm. Knapp is adept at wrist twisting and thus manages to get his name in print . . . S/Sgt. Klinefelter is making his second appearance in the ETO. Just back from the States, he said of his furlough that if he had to do it all over again—he would!

C Co.—The preview of Spring resulted in baseball equipment and players getting out for some of the sun-same. According to Lt. Hamblin, rec. and athletic officer, there's good material for a topnotch team . . . The basketball team is already '48 champ . . . The discussion of pass and furlough policy a couple of weeks ago was a masterpiece of tact and diplomacy. How else would it have gone off so smoothly and to the satisfaction of all concerned? . . . Between Pfc Beasley and Pfc Milliken, one of them will soon be sending their million-dollar letter . . . The GI wavers are back—Sgt. Traband, May, Lyon and Pfc Lowery from the UK and Sgt. Wright from the Riviera. The thrill is gone but the memory lingers on . . . The guy who makes those juicy cookies and delicate pie crusts for your pleasure is Sgt. Crow.

First Sergeant Funk, C Co., Crack Trooper

Meet First Sergeant Leonard Funk, the paratrooper's paratrooper.

Hotter than a two-dollar pistol, C Company's top non-com has come as close as any individual to convincing Jerry he should have stood in bed or something to that effect.

Deceptive in size and appearance, Funk is just about as successful and colorful an operator as they come in the ETO. He has led dozens of night patrols, harassed and killed the enemy far behind the lines, set up aid stations and even acted as company commander when all available officers became casualties.

Small, five feet four inches in height; compact, 140-pounds; his appearance is anything but that of the swaggering trooper so often detailed in fact and fiction.

Among the men of his company he is more frequently referred to as "Napoleon."

In Normandy he landed nearly 40 miles inland with other members of the stick but successfully waged a 10-day campaign of terror and destruction before breaking through to rejoin the Regiment. Funk's leadership was such that not one member of the small unit was lost.

In Holland he and three other men wiped out three 20 mm. AA guns and their crews just as the gliders came in for a landing. More than 20 Jerries were killed in this action.

In Belgium, while acting as company executive officer, he organized company headquarters personnel into a fighting team, cleared several houses of enemy, foiled an attempted break by 80 prisoners and set up an aid station to take care of the wounded.

These are just a few of the typical Funk activities. He has not had too much time to go front and center.

'A' Troops Eye 1st Battalion Sports Title

Company A is off to a flying start toward the athletic crown of the First Battalion, according to results of the first week's competition.

After winning two volleyball games, a softball game and football game from Hq. Co., Able Co. is moving corporate plans for a beer, with the prize offered by Lt. Col. Shields Warren, to the unit chalking up the best record in sports competition within the Battalion.

With the aid of the most famous talent scout in the business, Uncle Sam — A Company has been able to take its stars from some of the best schools in the States. Among these are Sgt. Ed Adelman, formerly of Mars Hill College, North Carolina; Cpl. Jim Fust, ex-Louisville, Ky.; Hammond High ace; Pfc Maurice Myers of Public School No. 2, Kingston, Ky., and Pfc Shifty Sloan, the self-made ball player.

WOLFHOUNDS DEFY

Wolfhounds, B Company's answer to the need for better basketball teams in the ETO, today issued an unconditional challenge to others in the Red Devil Regiment to meet in the Harness gymnasium for a basketball game or what have you. So far the wolfhounds have measured Service Company, 27 to 10 and A Company, 20 to 6.

SMITH GREETS TRANSFER

When Sgt. Willie Smith of A Co. looked over the new arrivals into the company from the 509th, he made no attempt to hide his delight. They were fine looking men and their fighting ability was beyond question. However, it was neither of these things that made the Sgt. so happy. One of the men was an old friend—who owed Smith 40 barks! The sgt. will undoubtedly take good care of his investment.

RED DEVILS SMASH THRU ROOF OF HITLER'S FORTRESS EUROPE

in Normandy.

The 508 Parachute Infantry Regiment, after not quite 20 months old, has played one of the more spectacular and successful roles in the assault against Hitler's Fortress Europe.

Its first assignment, which began in January on the sandy flats of Camp Blanding, Florida, included two airborne operations against the states and a prominent part in defeating the German attempt to break out of the Ardennes action in Belgium.

Just before it gained its nickname as "the Devil's Brigade," the 508 gave every indication that it was to become one of the stars in airborne attacks.

Plans to provide a cadre for the 508 Parachute Infantry Regiment were put down at Ft. Meade, near Columbia Bay E. Lindquist and associates effected at Camp Blanding, Florida, October 26, 1942.

A bittersweet return at this time, Col. Lindquist and his cadre began selection of some 2000 men from a group of 4000 which had volunteered directly from reception centers.

Once the cream of the draft crop was selected, the Regiment plunged into an intense training program which continued until the end of October, 1942. During this training period of 18 weeks, cadres followed an eight-hour schedule six days of the week. Only the cadre were given passes with the exception of the one day personnel were permitted to purchase Christmas presents at Jacksonville.

By the time the basic course ended, the 508th Regiment had been garrisoned in selected weapons, had made its plans to break for port each day on the single route and was beginning to workday whether he was in the paratroops or not.

Early in February the outfit hit the road and moved to Fort Benning, where it presented the famed Jump School in intensive classes. Upon completion of the school the Commandant of the School wrote to the Commandant of the School: "This is the best outfit that has ever gone through the Parachute School."

In the middle of March the Regiment moved to Camp Mackall, North Carolina and began what is known as the "heat training program." Here the Red Devils learned how to function as a team, jump equipment, the destruction of Nazi traitors over the oppressed peoples of Europe and security for ourselves in a free world.

Colonel Lindquist called the Regiment together and said: "We have said,

"The Red Devils are the best fighting force in the world. We have to keep the red out at all times and retain a few last records. Consequently the assignment sending the Regiment into the Carolina mountains out of the dry hot sun was greeted with understandable enthusiasm."

The Tennessee maneuvers were the part of the year which the Red Devils left just now, but then they would be ready for the big show, the trying next summer. The Regiment acted as the enemy force opposing the Hitler Atlantic Division.

Since the maneuver period ended, the 508th Regiment was ordered to get ready for an overseas shipment and moved into Camp Shanks shortly before Christmas. Sometime in the following month it got off the boat and set up headquarters in Scotland, attached to the 82d Airborne Division.

In Normandy, where it was to play the part it was to play in the invasion of western Europe, the 508th became General Dwight D. Eisenhower's historic message:

"You are about to embark upon the Great Crusade—Liberate which we have striven for these many months. The eyes of the world are upon you. The hopes and prayers of millions of people everywhere are with you. And history will judge us on other criteria, you will know about the destruction of the German war machine, the elimination of Nazi tyranny over the oppressed peoples of Europe and security for ourselves in a free world."

Shortly before the 508th Regiment was sent to Normandy, Lt. Col. Lindquist and his cadre were granted a few last records. Consequently the assignment sending the Regiment into the Carolina mountains out of the dry hot sun was greeted with understandable enthusiasm.

"I hope that a day will be had in store for you, a happy landing and good luck."

Shortly after arriving in England, the 508th moved north of London and made itself a home at Farnham. As the fall, a heavy cloud formation and severe separations began to settle and within the planes swayed heavily anti-aircraft fire from flak guns and automatic small arms took their toll of Red Devils before the drop and during the descent.

As a result, the Regiment was well scattered following the jump and the Red Devil was carried in the swing by his comrades. However, the plane down the previous night were lost under Colonel Lindquist, a second senior Captain Neasek and Neumann in an area bordering the east bank of the Mersey River and the others under Lt. Col. Shandley and Lt. Col. Warren on the western side.

Regiments strength on the eastern side of the Mersey, a first numbered about 100 survivors. Colonel Lindquist ordered the bridge on the vicinity of Chef de Pont seized and prepared for demolition. Although forces of the German Fifth Parachute Division launched aerial counter attacks to recapture possession, the bridge was defended successfully and retained intact.

Following a crossing at LaPorce, Colonel Lindquist joined up the previously split and reorganized 508th Regiment commanded by Captain Fine. The First Battalion, a mixed heterogeneous force covered with artillery fire that a dozen three-quarters mile in length had to be demolished by the engineers.

First and Third Battalions soon seized control of the road not leading from La Hare to LaPorce while the Second Battalion advanced and captured Beaufort. A German tank replacement group then proceeded to take the open road to Arnhem, a distance of 10 miles. In addition to destroying 10 tanks, the Second Battalion captured 15 vehicles in good running condition and 50,000 gallons of gasoline. As a result, the Second Battalion operated as a mounted unit for 24 hours until the transportation was requisitioned by higher headquarters.

The First Battalion remained west of Dickebusch and the First and Second Battalions gives the mission of passing through the 508 Regiment in St. sever Le Vionne and seizing high ground controlling an inundated area near the western beach of the Normandy Peninsula.

The Third Battalion, in the meantime crossed the Dore River to set up the first headland on this narrow waterway. Location of the action was near Perier.

The Regiment was forced to attack over open ground lacking cover and concealment. Despite fanatical German resistance the objective was reached and the position organized by nightfall. This action was the bloodiest involving the Regiment during the Normandy campaign.

Lt. Louis Polanski, who was later to be awarded the Silver Star with cluster, the Bronze Star with cluster, and the Purple Heart with two clusters, led Company F, then consisting of 20 men, in a spectacular assault. Over 100 Germans were taken, but company lost 10 men wounded and four killed.

The Regiment was subsequently relieved by the 82d Division and departed for a rest base.

During the Normandy campaign the 508th Regiment took 30 miles of territory from the Germans.

Preparations for the Holland campaign began immediately upon return to base camp. Replacements for casualties introduce himself.

He lay down by the fire, his rifle at his side, and within a minute was sound asleep.

Some time later in the night, he awoke suddenly and found someone leaning over him. He was blinded by a flashlight shining in his face. In an instant he recognized one of his three "boots". He was a Jerry.

Canard started a well-aimed shoulder block but before he could reach pay dirt, the Jerry smashed him across the nose with the flashlight. The blow dropped him to the floor but in an instant Canard was on his feet, this time with a bayonet in his hand.

The Jerry let out a yell for help to his two companions in the next room and then headed for the nearest exit. Conrad stopped to pick up his rifle and then followed him outside.

He cut loose—with the three rounds remaining in the clip and then decided this was the best time to rejoin the company. He did.

It was a few days before Canard admitted where he got the beat up nose despite intensive questioning by his buddies. He declined to apply for the Purple Heart.

"That's my first and last attempt at shacking up with the Jerries," Canard explained, "and as far as this non-fraternization program is concerned, that's for me from here out."

Vets Back In States

Continued from Page 1 of H Company, who hails from Floral Park, Long Island, says the servicemen will have to compete with one another as well as civilians when it comes to getting jobs immediately after returning home. "And I'm damn sure that a Congressional Medal of Honor still needs a nickel along with it to buy a hamburger."

The Red Devils and the hundreds of ETO veterans talked it over many a night on the boat back and have reached the conclusion that the GI Bill of Rights has the best answers to the problem.

One of them pointed out: "After the war is over, that is the thing that gives us the right to be a civilian, too."

Colonel Lindquist Former Sports Star

Like the 501st Regiment, the 508th was formed with personnel volunteering directly from reception centers. Some 3500 to 4000 were screened to obtain 2200. This hand-picked group was then given basic training at Camp Blanding, Florida and then went through jump school at Fort Benning as a unit in battalion classes.

From there on the story of Colonel Lindquist's jumps are parallel. He led the Red Devil regiment from the maneuver areas of Carolina and Tennessee overseas into Normandy, Holland and Belgium under colors of the veteran 82nd Airborne Division.

Perhaps the day isn't too far distant when hell lead the Red Devils back. For there's a Pittsfield, Maine home and family waiting for him too: his wife, Mrs. Alice Lindquist, and two sons, Roy, Jr. age 12, and Robert, age 9.

His hobbies are sports, all sports. At West Point he was captain of the Ice Hockey team and, while a yearling, he qualified as one of the school's legendary diamond heroes by belting a home run as the Army whipped Navy, 9-7.

Today Colonel Lindquist has not forgotten how to win ball games—or how to make home runs.

Mail Devil's Digest To Family at Home

Many of the features contained in DEVIL'S DIGEST, such as the Regimental History on pages four and five, as well as the biographical sketches of your officers and the hundreds of personal items about yourself and your buddies, will prove still more interesting reading after the ETO is history and you are back home playing in the pipe and slipper league.

Here's what the Jerries see if they are unlucky enough to be on D-day when elements of Lt. Col. Louis Mendez Third Battalion fill the sky with silk on way down. Veterans of combat jumps in Normandy and Holland, high standards of jump proficiency illustrated above are typical of those found throughout 508th Parachute Infantry Regiment. Compact pattern formed in air as Red Devils clear aircraft will be retained on drop zone.

THIRD BATTALION NEWS

Free - Bold - Rapid

Third Battalion Alumni Are Leading Red Devil Cheering Within The States

HQ, CO.—Remember Charles Gallinger who was with the 81mm mortars in Normandy? After recovering from his wounds he is now back in the States and honorably discharged as a civilian ... more he's married and is about to become a father ... who said the Third Battalion troopers aren't fast ... And speaking of civilian alumni or fellows well on the road to recovery back in the States, a check up shows we have nine other fellows in our cheering section ... Sgt. Wilfred Mack, Pfc John Walniewicz, Pfc Alex Solle, Pfc

He is S/Sgt. Bill Lord II, and we wish him all the success in the world ... There are an unidentified few members of the company who would like to know where Lt. Joseph Palladino acquired all the experience in locating beer ... During the height of a recent Big Social engagement, a barrel was removed to an alternate position, dug in, concealed, camouflaged and thus filled for future reference ... Lt. Palladino's ability to locate the suds after a brief search indicated that he is no recruit at this sort of thing ... And if we may quote a citation or two, "he was in the best traditions of the Airborne forces."

Cpl. Canary

Patrick French, Pfc Charley Gallingher and Bob Daniels, John Knoll, Asa Reese and Ute Kendrick ... They were with us in Normandy on D day and according to their latest letters are in good shape again now ... Anyone interested in learning a baseball the hard way might challenge this company ... 1st Sergeant Orvel Shaver promises that he and the rest of the team will take it easy most of the time ... Corporal King Burke, back from a 30-day furlough in the States, says the folks over there knew more about the war than he did ... So when the subject came up he just sat around and got zeroed in ... His Co. has a better than average record for supplying officers from the ranks ... Lt. Joseph Anderson, formerly a sergeant with the 81mm platoon and 1st Lt. John Little, Bn. B-2, both won Purple Hearts ... Another is on the way.

McCraw Track Ace

HQ, and HQ, CO.—New 1st Sgt. Roy McCraw turns out to be a former track star who insists on taking us all for a trot every morning (puff, puff!) ... M/Sgt. Brodsky is off to OCS to get his commission the hard way. Good luck, Brod ... Two of our "Bobs"—Saville and Lane—will be shedding their corporal's stripes for some well deserved sergeant's variety ... M/Sgt. Sample keeps rolling along. He is one of the few men who haven't missed a day of combat time (OK, so there are 30 others in the company) ... Sgt. Teddy Belliveau and Lt. Don Hardwick had a grand time in our "home town" during their recent return engagement in the UK ... And Elsie (Cpl. Bob Ellis) rates congrats on his marriage while rotating in the States ... The Bunkies in their den of iniquity, lavished with pinups of delicious and luscious damsels, have a nifty sewing machine and for a nominal fee (an arm or leg) you can get your patches sewed on correctly ... Lt. Charles Yate's Yate Halls mislaid on a party they almost had ... S-2's battle cry is: "I will wear my helmet."

SERVICE CO.—One of the most talented right arms in the company belongs to Pfc "Jack" Spagna who does an artistic job with a drawing brush, a barber clipper, or the Ivory cubes ... And speaking of artistic work, the bulletin board in front of the Private's Den is kept pretty by one of the Special Service workhorses — Pfc Frank Fleury ... He also changes the reels during the ackack barrages in the Red Devil Cinema ... Acting 1st Sgt. Leopold Franzkowski's blonde mustache is blooming in this Spring weather, but Cpl. Ben Schwartzman's is more apt to get caught in his suspension lines ... The kid with the Peapod smile, Pfc Jimmy Musica likes his new job as assistant mail orderly while his boss, Tech 5 Julius Vargo keeps the personnel happy with prompt mail deliveries.

1st Sgt. Funk Is Nemesis To Jerry

Continued from Page 3 for hero's hardware. So far a Distinguished Service Cross, the nation's second highest award, and a Purple Heart with two clusters top off his collection.

But these two ribbons may have some important company. He has been recommended for the Bronze and Silver Stars and considered for the Congressional Medal of Honor.

McBLANE TO OCS

S-Sgt. Thomas D. McBlane, veteran communication sergeant of Company D, has been selected to attend Officers Candidate School near Paris. He has been the company's radio and wire chief for the airborne invasions of Normandy and Holland, as well as the Ardennes campaign in Belgium.

Holland Jump Surprises Jerries...Turn Back Belgium Attack

were received for the first time and new equipment issued.

In August, the First Allied Airborne Army under Lt. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton was created and assigned the mission of seizing the key Dutch communications cities of Eindhoven, Nijmegen and Arnhem. Control of these towns would place the mouth of the Rhine in Allied hands, cut off main German forces in Western Holland and place Allied armies in a position to advance into Holland quickly.

Besides the 82nd Airborne Division, other components of the First Allied Airborne Army were the 101st Division, the British 1st and 6th Divisions and the 1st Polish Parachute Brigade.

Drop time for the Red Devils in Holland came at 1328, 17 September 1944. Weather conditions were perfect and unlike the Normandy jump made at night this one was executed in broad daylight. Flak and anti-aircraft fire was light.

All elements of the Regiment were able to assemble quickly and proceed to the objectives. The First and Second Battalions landed on the DZ while the Third came in 700 yards southeast. Generally all were bunched.

After seizing assigned objectives, the Regiment took up a defensive position that required maintenance of a MLP over 12 thousand yards in length with enemy on three sides.

Bridge No. 10 across the Maas-Waal Canal, assigned objective of the Second Battalion, was seized by a platoon under the command of Lt. Polette and its destruction prevented.

During the operation the Red Devils became the first Allied Airborne unit to capture prisoners in Germany when Capt. D. J. the first prisoners of war in Germany secured by Allied Airborne troops.

Two plane loads from Company A were erroneously dropped about 10 miles east of the drop zone in German territory. Lt. Combs, the senior officer present, fought his way back to his battalion, killing an estimated 20 Jerries and bringing back 49 prisoners. He carried out this action with a group of 22 men after having been wounded by flak prior to jumping.

Captain Adams, also of A Company, led a platoon into Nijmegen where they destroyed the control room for the demolition of Nijmegen bridge. Following this, Captain Adams and the platoon were cut off, surrounded and remained in Nijmegen until September 22 when they were able to rejoin the battalion.

Companies C and D, on 20 minutes notice, cleared the landing zone for glider elements which followed the troops into the operation. Action was fast and furious and was topped off with a bloodbath finish. Last of the Jerry opposition was disposed of just as the first glider hit the ground.

At one time during the operation the Regiment was attached to the British 53 (Welsh) Division and was finally relieved by a British brigade in the Bemmel area on November 10, 1944.

After a little over a month's rest in France, the Regiment, on 13 hours notice, was sent back into action again. This time the Red Devils went into the line in trucks and were buried into the breach caused by Field Marshal Von Rundstedt's drive to break through the Allied lines in the Ardennes sector in Belgium.

The Regiment raced north, passing through Bastogne, to take up positions behind hard-pressed elements of the 10th and 7th Armored divisions who then withdrew to the rear.

S/Sgt. Klinefelter Volunteers Again, Jolts B Company

To be or not to be home is the question in Company B today.

It's all the fault of Staff Sergeant Philip Klinefelter, Normandy and Holland vet, twice wounded and once decorated. He has just returned from a 20-day furlough in the States.

To be frank about it, S/Sgt. Klinefelter's appearance and actions around the company area cause us somewhat of a shock as he who recently volunteered him out as one of the sharper operators in the ETO.

The new S/Sgt. Klinefelter has lost weight. This is okay since no one is expected to waste time sleeping or eating while spending 20 days in the States but the thing that has everyone thinking "he was a good guy when he had it" is his attitude towards work.

On the very first day, S/Sgt. Klinefelter herded himself into his work. It was clear to everyone that he was conscientious and ambitious, in fact he even volunteered to do this job and that job.

There are many opinions advanced as to just what has happened him. There are a few who maintain that it was his job to be married during the furlough that is causing this strange phenomenon. There are others who claim that in the 15 weeks Sgt. Klinefelter was away making the trip he forgot everything he learned about the Army. Then there are three or four others who absolutely refuse to believe what they have seen and are reporting to the dispensary to have their eyes checked.

To begin with, S/Sgt. Klinefelter got off to a bad start. Rushed up to Captain Milligan, company commander, reported and said, "Sir, I'm very glad to be back."

Captain Milligan held his ground for a few moments, mumbled something about being one of his best non-coms and then turned slowly and walked back into his tent. He was shaking his head as he did down.

Today it would be difficult to give someone else in B Company a furlough to the States. Too many are convinced that such a venture will lead only to a sad ending such as getting married, making you ambitious and conscientious and in plain sight of everyone, volunteer for more.

with the Regimental CP at Goronne, orders were received from higher headquarters to withdraw five miles and set up a new defensive line. The division was in danger of being flanked.

The withdrawal, only retrograde movement executed by the Red Devils since entering combat in Normandy, began in the bitter cold of Christmas Eve.

Major Benjamin Delameter, then captain and executive officer of the First Battalion, was given command of the covering force which consisted of one platoon from the three rifle companies. Enemy identified opposing the regimental line were a SS Panzer Division and a Volksgrenadier.

The Regiment pulled out, leaving the small covering force to face the Jerries massing across the river for an attack that night. Orders were to hold until 0315 the next morning at all costs.

Shortly before midnight the German attack came. A reinforced battalion came at the three platoons in successive waves only to be dropped in their tracks by machine gun and BAR fire at point-blank range.

Some of the positions were finally overrun when ammunition became exhausted but those who remained in the platoon kept fighting in place until the order was received to infiltrate through the town of Remouchamps and form up for a march back to the Regiment.

On the night of the 28th of December the Jerries made one more all-out effort to break through. One platoon of G Company was overrun but E Company less one platoon together with a platoon of F Company launched a counter-attack and by 0430 the MLR had been restored. From them on the Jerries never regained the initiative in the sector.

During this particular phase of the Ardennes operation, the Red Devils captured 205 prisoners, counted 445 German dead, assisted in the successful extraction of elements of three divisions from the St. Vith area and captured Thier Du Mont Ridge, the final objective in the 82nd Division's attack from Basse Bodeux-Erria.

During the month of January and in snow hip deep, making supply lines hazardous and uncertain, the Regiment was committed in various sectors as the Ardennes salient was liquidated. In this period the Regiment advanced from Basse Bodeux, Belgium, to Losheimergraben, Germany.

In addition 660 more prisoners were taken patrol from the Second Battalion that is believed to be the first return to Germany by 82nd Division troops since the opening of the German drive toward Liege. The Third Battalion captured a 380 mm gun, believed to be one of the largest artillery pieces taken by First Army troops in the campaign.

During the month of February, orders were received from division to clear the area to the Roer valley of all enemy and to seize the high ground overlooking the narrow valley.

The First Battalion jumped off in the attack at 0200 through dense anti-personnel mine fields. Despite this the First Battalion was on its objective by 0650. At 0900 the Second Battalion pushed on to the river line in its sector and by nightfall all enemy opposition west of the Roer had been wiped out.

Today as the once mighty German army stands on the brink of defeat the Red Devils of the 508th Parachute Infantry continue to play their assigned role in the defense of America's liberties. For courage, valor and achievement, they have been awarded a Unit Citation by the President of the United States and a permanent place in history of great fighting units.
